To whom it may concern:

I am pleased to recommend Patryk for admission to your university. He is a student whose dedication, curiosity, and sense of purpose consistently elevated the atmosphere of my IB English classroom. From the beginning, Patryk approached learning with an energy that felt entirely his own. He took on extra prompts simply because he wanted to grow, sought out additional resources when something sparked his interest, and experimented with different writing approaches until he discovered the style that suited him. His progress was never passive; it was shaped by his willingness to push himself and engage deeply with the work.

Patryk's commitment to excellence reached far beyond academics. He balanced a demanding IB course load while investing himself fully in an impressive range of extracurricular pursuits. He served as a Model United Nations delegate, chair, and eventually president, contributed thoughtfully as a yearbook member, led our ECO committee, played varsity basketball for the school, captained the Valencia club team, and represented the U18 Irish national team. The sheer breadth of these responsibilities would challenge most students, yet Patryk handled them with a level of maturity that made the balancing act look effortless.

As a student-athlete, he understood the weight of his obligations in both arenas and never allowed one to become an excuse for the other. When competitions required him to travel, he arranged to submit work early and communicated well in advance. He anticipated problems before they appeared and managed his time with a calm sense of purpose that spoke to both discipline and foresight. His reliability made him not only easy to teach, but easy to trust.

What I admire most about Patryk is his forward-looking spirit. He approaches life with a clear sense of direction, and our conversations often drifted toward the future he is steadily building. Sometimes the goal was immediate, such as earning a 7 on the Paper 1 assessment, which he did. Other times it was more expansive, such as his interest in entrepreneurship or his dream of one day playing in the NBA. Whatever the scale, Patryk brings the same blend of hope, drive, and perseverance to each ambition. He is a young man who dreams boldly and works faithfully toward those dreams.

I have no doubt that Patryk will bring the same commitment, curiosity, and heart to his university studies that he brought to our school community. He is ready for the challenges ahead, and I recommend him with complete confidence.

Sincerely,

Krystal Peters, M.Ed.
